SUMMARY

The purpose of this briefing is to provide an overview of the progress made so far by the IGC on the subject of social exclusion.

Successive European Councils, the report of the Reflection Group and the report of the Italian Presidency have broached the subject indirectly during negotiations on fundamental rights, unemployment or, more generally, the social dimension.

A number of Member States (Belgium, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, Ireland, France, Portugal and Finland), the European Parliament, the Commission and numerous NGOs have set out their own positions. Particular attention is paid to the proposals of Ireland and the European Parliament, which are, for the time being, the most developed.

Finally, the Irish Presidency has indicated its desire to place emphasis, within the social dimension, on the needs of the excluded, the young, the long-term unemployed and unemployed women. In connection with its exercise of the Presidency of the Council, the Irish Government probably intends to issue a communication on this subject before the plenary session of the European Parliament on 23 October 1996.

BRIEFING ON SOCIAL EXCLUSION AND THE IGC

1 The IGC agenda and combating social exclusion

One of the IGC's main objectives is to bring Europe closer to the citizen. Yet with more than 17 million people unemployed and more than 50 million poor people in Europe, political, economic and social actors, as well as citizens, are increasingly worried about the phenomenon of social exclusion.

While it is true that at present there is no epistemological or political consensus about how to define and measure poverty and social exclusion, the concepts used in Community action apply two criteria of identification. Firstly, on the basis of the Council Decision of 19 December 1984, the reference framework is national: by poor people is meant individuals, families, groups of persons with such scant material, cultural and social resources that they are excluded from the minimum acceptable life styles in the Member State. Secondly, the notion of social exclusion is dynamic and multi-dimensional. It is dynamic in so far as it describes both processes as well as the situations which result from those processes. And it is multi-dimensional in that it emphasizes the multitude of mechanisms by which people and groups are barred from participation in the social exchanges, practices and rights which constitute social integration and hence identity. From those two criteria, it is apparent that - as Mr Delors pointed out in June 1993 - while exclusion contains the notion of poverty, poverty does not contain the notion of exclusion.

Successive European Councils have expressed views on what should be on the agenda of the Intergovernmental Conference. They included a social facet which was not initially envisaged, but which had its origin in the economic crisis and its effects on employment. The aim of this briefing is to assess the progress made in the Conference on the issue of social exclusion. It highlights the concerns of a number of Member States, the European Parliament, the Commission and a large number of NGOs, provides each of them an opportunity to set out and expand on their positions and gives fresh impetus to the IGC on an issue that is central to the priorities of the Irish Presidency and to which, as the Reflection Group itself points out, most Member States consider an urgent response is needed.

Now that the issue is on the agenda, it remains to be seen how it will be dealt with. So far, the Members States - with the exception of Ireland - have not elaborated on the subject themselves. The issue has, at best, been raised in an indirect way, in the negotiations on fundamental rights (the general non-discrimination provision and the expansion of social rights), unemployment (in particular, the specific measures for the most disadvantaged), or more generally, the social dimension (inclusion of the social protocol and in particular the fifth indent of Article 2(1) on the integration of persons excluded from the labour market; extension of the scope of codecision). Consequently, while the Irish Presidency has made a number of specific proposals on the subject of social exclusion, they relate essentially to other IGC issues, in particular to development of the Union's social dimension and enhancement of European citizenship.

2 The Treaty and combating social exclusion

The Treaty on European Union does not contain provisions specifically on combating social exclusion.

The implementation of specific Community programmes to combat poverty ('the poverty programmes' of 1975-80, ECU 20 million; 1985-89, ECU 29 million; 1990-94, ECU 55 million; and the fourth programme proposed by the Commission in September 1993 and blocked in Council in June 1995 after opposition from Germany and the United Kingdom based on, respectively, the subsidiarity principle and on lack of proof of the programme's effectiveness), which have long constituted the preferred and only instrument of community action in the field of combating social exclusion, was thus based on Article 235, which requires a unanimous vote in Council. That was also the case for the various initiatives developed subsequently (support for NGOs, Council Recommendation of 24 June 1992 on recognition of the right to guaranteed resources and services, exchanges of experience, seminars and publications of the Observatory on National Policies to Combat Social Exclusion).

It should also be noted, in the context of structural fund action, that the Commission decided at its meeting of 8 May 1996 to append to the framework initiative on employment and the development of human resources of 15 June 1994 a new section entitled 'Emploi-INTEGRA' covering the planning period 1996-1999. The objective of that section is to promote measures to improve access to the labour market and the employability of vulnerable groups excluded, or at risk of exclusion, from the labour market. The budget earmarked for the part is ECU 358 million and is therefore much larger than the budget earmarked for the Poverty 4 programme.

References to social exclusion are to be found in the Social Charter and the Social Protocol, to which, it should not be forgotten, the United Kingdom is not a signatory.

The Social Charter is a political declaration by eleven Member States and as such is not legally binding. It has, however, given impetus to the Commission in the social sphere (action programmes, proposals for directives).

It concerns workers' social rights. However, Article 10 of the Charter, on social protection, provides: 'Persons who have been unable either to enter or re-enter the labour market and have no means of subsistence must be able to receive sufficient resources and social assistance in keeping with their particular situation'. Article 27 provides that those rights must be implemented by national legislation, but that the Commission may make proposals regarding the initiatives to be taken at the Community level.

In signing the protocol on social policy, the eleven Member States undertook to continue along the path laid down in the 1989 Social Charter. Moreover, they broadened their common objectives. Whereas Article 117 of the EEC Treaty concerns exclusively the social rights of workers ('[promotion of] improved working conditions and an improved standard of living for workers'), Article 1 of the agreement seeks more generally 'the promotion of employment ... proper social protection ... the development of human resources with a view to lasting high employment and the combating of exclusion'. This is first time that the subject of combating social exclusion has been mentioned at such a high level. Finally, the fields in which the council decides by qualified majority are extensive and include decisions on 'the integration of persons excluded from the labour market' (Article 2(1), fifth indent).

Following that analysis and having regard to the issue of combating social exclusion, the legal situation is the following: (i) there are two separate legal bases for social policy; (ii) only the Protocol expressly mentions the aim of combating social exclusion; (iii) in both cases the legislation on social protection and combating social exclusion must be adopted unanimously, with the exception of decisions on the integration of excluded persons into the labour market.

It should be noted in passing that since July 1993 structural fund reform, 'persons vulnerable to social exclusion' have been included among the target groups of Objective 3 action of the funds, in particular the European Social Fund.

3    The European Council

At the Turin summit, the European Council established the terms of reference and the programme for the Conference. It took the view that the Conference should, without prejudice to other questions that might be raised during the Conference, focus on a number of priority areas.

The European Council did not refer to the concept of social exclusion. However, it considered that the IGC should respond to the concerns of citizens ('a Union closer to its citizens'). In order to achieve that aim, it singled out the following fields: (i) stronger fundamental rights for citizens, including the principles of equality and non-discrimination; (ii) the fight against unemployment as a priority task of the Union.

4    The report of the Italian Presidency to the Florence European Council: 'Progress report on the Intergovernmental Conference'

The report is intended to provide an overview of the proceedings of the Conference to date, and in particular to clarify the political questions on which, to judge from the trends that seem to be emerging at this stage, the next phase of the Conference will focus.

Chapter I of the report deals with the objective of a Union closer to its citizens. It recalls the suggestion that new provisions on social exclusion be introduced into the Treaty. It also broaches that subject indirectly in the context of the following developments:

- (i) The question whether non-discrimination should be extended, and enhancing the content of citizenship by adding certain rights to those at present contained in Part Two of the ECT, including certain socio-economic rights, in particular the right to equal opportunities and the rights embodied in the European Social Charter. Those questions are relevant here because discrimination based on grounds relating to race, sex, age, sexual orientation, disability or religious convictions often contribute to social exclusion.
- (ii) The question of employment. Although the report identifies two approaches to tackling this problem, it stresses that the more ambitious approach gives a more precise definition of Community objectives including, firstly, a high level of employment and social protection and, secondly, adding the concept of combating social exclusion, and reflecting those objectives in a separate title/chapter of the Treaty.

5 The general outline for a draft revision of the treaties submitted by the Irish Presidency to the Dublin European Council of 13 and 14 December 1996

The object of the draft treaty revision of 5 December 1996 submitted under the responsibility of the Irish Presidency to the Dublin European Council is to reflect the work carried out in the context of the IGC, which has resulted to date in a general legal outline for revision of the treaties. The document forms the basis for the final agreement on a treaty planned for the European Council to be held in Amsterdam in June 1997 under the Dutch Presidency.

The Irish Presidency's document contains an explicit reference to social exclusion in Chapter 5 - 'Social Provisions' - of its Section II, which tackles one of the main objectives underlying the work of the conference: that of making the Union more comprehensible and more meaningful to its citizens. There was broad consensus at the conference that the social provisions of the EC Treaty should be fleshed out, inter alia by incorporating the Agreement on Social Policy in the Treaty. The Presidency recognized the importance of this proposal as an objective to be achieved by the Conference, while acknowledging the widely held view that it would be preferable for this question to be considered in detail at a later stage in the work of the IGC. In addition, 'the Presidency considers that in examining in due course the incorporation of the Social Agreement into the Treaty, the Conference should consider whether certain improvements of substance should be made in order to strengthen the effectiveness of the Community's social policy including for example the proposal which has been made to strengthen the Treaty provisions on social exclusion'.

The texts proposed by the Presidency also aim to include the promotion of a high level of employment among the Community's aims, to add a new title on employment to the Treaty and to extend considerably the range of grounds on which Community action against discrimination can be based. It is proposed to add a new Article 6a to the TEC as follows:

'Within the scope of application of this Treaty and without prejudice to any special provisions contained therein, the Council, acting unanimously on a proposal from the Commission and after consulting the European Parliament, may take appropriate action to prohibit discrimination based on sex, racial, ethnic or social origin, religious belief, disability, age, or sexual orientation'.

According to the Presidency's document, the Conference should continue its detailed discussions on the forms of discrimination against which the Community could act, with the ultimate aim of drawing up a definitive list and precise definitions. It has also been suggested that certain social rights should be mentioned specifically in the Treaty.

The Dublin European Council also confirmed its commitment to the development and deepening at European Union level of an integrated employment strategy including macroeconomic and structural measures. The 'Dublin declaration on employment - a European strategy for employment', which is included in the annex to the Presidency's conclusions, says that, in the interests of equality, vulnerable groups - i.e. women, unemployed young people and the long-term unemployed - should receive special support. The European Council calls on the Member States to adopt the necessary measures to put an end to segregation on the labour market, to gear training and job-experience to the needs of young people and to take timely action to ensure, in a context of active support, that the unemployed do not drift into long-term unemployment.

6 Positions of the institutions

6.1 Council of Ministers

The report of 10 April 1995 on the functioning of the TEU does not mention social exclusion.

The positions of the Irish Presidency were set out by the Irish prime minister, Mr John Bruton, at the press conference held on 2 July 1996 in the course of the meeting between the Commission and the Irish Presidency, and by the President-in-Office of the Council, Mr Dick Spring, when he presented the priorities of the Irish Presidency to the European Parliament on 17 July 1996.

The hallmark of those positions is the assertion that the priority agenda would include the question of employment, and in that context, with the emphasis on the needs of the excluded, the young, the long-term unemployed and unemployed women.

The document of 5 July 1996 setting out the priorities of the Irish Council Presidency announced the Presidency's intention of dealing with questions relating to unemployment and social exclusion by reinforcing the Confidence Pact for job creation and giving practical shape to the Essen process, while thinking very broadly about the future of systems of social protection and focussing, inter alia, on the role of these systems in the fight against long-term unemployment and social exclusion.

In its declaration on the occasion of the International Day against Poverty on 17 October 1996, the President-in-Office of the Council, Mr Proinsias De Rossa, emphasized the opportunity offered by the IGC to fill the 'social vacuum' and to establish a better balance between the market and social policy, and expressed the view that the Fourth Community programme against exclusion should be adopted. Speaking of the need for the adoption of national strategies against poverty, he laid stress on priority areas for action such as education, unemployment, rehabilitation of areas of poverty, and the fight against poverty in rural areas.

The Dutch Council Presidency, whose term of office runs from 1 January to 30 June, says in the document stating its priorities for this period that unemployment is still at an unacceptable level and that the development of employment is one of the Union's priorities, inter alia in the context of the IGC. The Presidency affirmed its intention of centring its efforts in the social area around two principles: the importance of progress in socio-economic integration and a solid anchoring of Europe's social dimension. With this in mind, the Presidency would draw up an interim report on the state of work of the Amsterdam European Council based on the contributions of the Ecofin Council and the Social Affairs Council. The main themes of the report would be a stable macroeconomic framework, the continuation of structural reforms aimed at improved functioning of the product and labour markets, and attention to specific target groups. Also, care would also be taken to ensure that the interim programme in the form of the medium-term social action programme progressed. The question would also be examined whether an appropriate social policy can contribute to sustainable economic development.

More recently, in response to the call addressed by MEPs from the European Parliament's Committee on Social Affairs to the President of the Council, Mr Melkert, for the EU to engage resolutely in a more active fight against exclusion, the Dutch Minister of Social Affairs and Employment said that the Dutch Government would be particularly active in supporting the Community programmes against exclusion. He did, however, point out to the Members the obstacles which would hold back these developments, in particular the problem of incorporating the social protocol into the Treaty.

6.2 Commission

In its opinion of 28 February 1996, the Commission considers that the social dimension should be one of the central themes at the Conference in order to secure a common base of social rights for all Union citizens. The Commission believes that to achieve that goal, (i) the Social Protocol must be integrated into the Treaty, (ii) clearer provisions must be laid down concerning cooperation between Member States on matters of social policy, such as the fight against marginalization or against poverty and, finally, (iii) better ways must also be found of involving those sections of civil society capable of developing initiatives and new forms of solidarity.

The incorporation of the Social Protocol into the body of the new Treaty was the subject of a note sent on 23 September 1996 by the Commission to the group of ministers' representatives at the Intergovernmental Conference. The legal proposals set out in this document are the first draft text in this area, are developed over three stages and consist in replacing the social provisions contained in Chapter I, Title VIII (Articles 117 to 122) with articles on social policy, making technical and institutional adjustments and proposing substantive improvements. Where social exclusion is concerned, whether directly or indirectly, the latter extend the Community's specified area of competence to cover the following:

- i) the fight against social exclusion: it was only mentioned in the Social Agreement as an objective of the Community and the Member States. The Commission extends this to cover the areas in which the Community supports and supplements action by the Member States. This change extends and completes the concept of 'integration of persons excluded from the labour market' originally provided for in the Social Agreement;
- ii) equal treatment of men and women;
- iii) prohibition of any form of discrimination relating to employment or working conditions;
- iv) social integration of third-country nationals lawfully residing on Community territory.

The Commission also recommends a strengthening of the Community's powers in these areas where it has specific competence. The main contribution of its proposal is that it gives the European Parliament and the Council the possibility of adopting incentive measures (action programmes). This provision (Article 118d of the draft) completes the legislative powers of the Council and European Parliament originally provided for in the Agreement. The latter enables them from now on to adopt, through legislative acts - and not simply through directives -, minimum, gradually applicable, requirements. In addition, the powers of the Commission are clarified and extended, so that it can, if necessary, 'support and complement their [the Member States'] action in the social policy field' (Article 118d(1) of the draft) rather than simply 'facilitat[ing] the coordination of their action' (Article 5 of the Agreement). To this end, it 'shall act in close cooperation with Member States by making studies, delivering opinions, adopting recommendations or arranging consultations' (new Article 118d(3), based on Article 118 of the present Treaty).

It should be noted, finally, that in his message of the occasion of the World Day against Poverty on 17 October 1996, Jacques Santer, President of the Commission, advocated a European policy to fight exclusion which would constitute a genuine forum in which solutions with added value could be developed in close collaboration with national, regional and, above all, local authorities, as well as with NGOs and other associations active in this area. Commissioner Padraig Flynn stressed in his statement on the same occasion that the fight against poverty should be incorporated in the Treaty and called on the President-in-Office of the Council to ensure that the IGC provided a legal base from which more vigorous action could be launched in the future.

6.3 European Parliament

In its resolution of 17 May 1995, the European Parliament considered that the European Union should have the resources to make especially the fight against unemployment and marginalization a priority objective of Union policies.

The European Parliament developed its thinking in the report of 13 March 1996 by Dury and Maij-Weggen, in which it defined its political priorities with a view to the IGC, following the publication of the work of the Reflection Group. The reports points out the need for a better definition of European citizenship, greater respect for fundamental rights, and the development of the social dimension of the Union. In order to achieve that objective, and with regard to combating social exclusion, the following proposals were made:

- (i) the incorporation of a special chapter constituting a declaration of the fundamental rights of the citizens and residents of Europe. That chapter would guarantee the principle of equal treatment and non-discrimination particularly on grounds of race, sex, sexual orientation, age, religion, or disability;
- (ii) the incorporation of the agreement on social policy and the inclusion in the body of the Treaty of the essential principles of the Community Charter of fundamental social rights;
- (iii) a set of provisions requiring:
  - the Commission to present a set of measures, accompanied by a timetable, necessary for completion of the social Union;
  - the Union to develop a policy designed to vanquish social injustice, exclusion, discrimination and poverty; the Commission should be given the powers necessary to implement this policy.

Finally, in its resolution of 19 June 1995 on the Florence European Council, the European Parliament considered that public concern focussed on the institution of a genuine European citizenship ( ... ) employment and social protection. It also considered that it was vital to move beyond the discussion stage and to give the IGC the necessary political impetus to ensure that it does not lead to stagnation or to only minimal revisions.

On the basis of those proposals, and as it recalled in its conclusions on the Commission's final report on the implementation of the 'Poverty 3' programme, the Parliament's position is the following: (i) it supports the need for Community measures to combat social exclusion; (ii) it calls for the inclusion of provisions that would form the legal basis for such actions and would make the objective of preventing social exclusion an express part of the conduct of the general and structural policies of the Union; (iii) it is in favour of extending qualified majority voting and codecision.

This position is developed further in the Resolution on the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty on 17 October 1996. Having regard to the fact that social exclusion and poverty represent a violation of human rights and a danger to democracy, Parliament took the view that the fight against these phenomena should be a priority in safeguarding social cohesion in the European Union and its Member States, and called on the Community institutions to make clear their political determination to combat them. To this end, Parliament considered that the fight against poverty should form an integral part of all Community initiatives and called on the Commission to propose that the principle of fighting poverty and social exclusion be incorporated into the text of the Treaty. Expressing its dismay at the actions of certain Member States which had led to the suspension of payment of ECU 12 million earmarked for excluded persons (Poverty IV programme), it stressed the need to adopt a programme against poverty, recalled the importance of employment policies and called on the Commission to make better use of the resources of the European Social Fund and other Community programmes with a view to reintegrating those excluded from society.

The European Parliament reiterated these positions in its Resolutions on the Dublin European Council of 13 and 14 December 1996 and the general outline for a draft revision of the Treaties, dated 16 January 1997, expressing Parliament's support for the Irish Government's proposal to a Treaty provision enabling the Community to take direct action to combat social exclusion.

Parliament also reacted positively to the Irish Presidency's proposals on employment and non-discrimination relating indirectly to social exclusion, and invited the Dutch Presidency to develop them further. Parliament did, however, warn the IGC against the risk of being contenting itself with a title or chapter on 'Employment' which had no real content, and considered that the provisions envisaged should be strengthened. It reiterated its call for all the social provisions in the Agreement on Social Policy annexed to Protocol No 14 to be incorporated in the Treaty and took the view that a detailed debate should be held at the IGC on the substantive improvements still to be made. It also took the view that a non-discrimination clause should have a direct effect and that its role should be reinforced by means of the codecision procedure. It regretted the absence of provisions on the rights of third-country nationals residing legally in the Union and reaffirmed that the Treaty should afford them, inter alia, respect for their human rights, equal treatment and non-discrimination with regard to social, economic and cultural rights.

It should be noted, finally, that the new President of the European Parliament, Mr Gil-Robles Gil-Delgado, referred to the fight against social exclusion in his inaugural address in Strasbourg on 15 January 1997.

7 Positions of the Member States

7.1 General considerations

This part concerns the specific positions of the Member States on the subject of social exclusion.

For the Member States which have not expressed any opinion on this subject, and in so far as it overlaps issues relating to fundamental rights, unemployment and social policy, reference is made to the relevant fact sheets.

7.2 Belgium

In its policy note 28 July 1995 to the Belgian Parliament, the Belgian Government stated its support for a common minimum floor in social matters, comprising, among other things, the incorporation of the social protocol in the Treaty on European Union, upwards harmonization of social provisions and combating social exclusion. Furthermore, it declared its support for extending qualified majority voting to social questions.

This initial Belgian Government position was confirmed and expanded on by the joint memorandum of 7 March 1996 of the Belgian, Luxembourg and Netherlands governments. It proposed the establishment of a common social core for all Union citizens, with inclusion of the content of the Social Charter in the Treaty as the starting point. With regard to employment, it proposed making the complementary role played by the Union explicit in the Treaty by introducing new provisions into the Treaty. They would provide for the formulation of annual recommendations by the Commission and approved by the Council ensuring coordination of the policies of the Member States and would accord particular importance to certain measures, including those intended to make it easier for the disadvantaged to gain access to the jobs market.

7.3 Luxembourg

The Luxembourg Government gave its initial views on the subject of social exclusion in its memorandum of 30 June 1996 on the IGC. It considered that Europe should demonstrate more solidarity, become more integrated and democratic and aim to combat social exclusion and, in general, preserve the social model embodied in the Treaty on European Union.

7.4 Netherlands

On the subject of social exclusion, the relevant views of the Netherlands government are those set out in the joint memorandum of the Belgian, Luxembourg and Netherlands governments with view to the IGC. The positions adopted by the Government of the Netherlands in the context of its Presidency from 1 January to 30 June 1997 (see above) should also be noted.

7.5 Ireland

In its White Paper of 26 March 1996, the Irish Government stressed the need to deal more effectively with the questions which most directly concern citizens, including employment and social exclusion.

Subsequently, in connection with its exercise of the duties of the Presidency of the Council, the Irish Government developed its position in a number of declarations (declaration of 6 June 1996 of the minister for social affairs, Proinsias de Rossa, at a conference of the European Anti-Poverty Network in Dublin; observations of the minister for social affairs at the informal Council of ministers for social affairs held on 10 and 11 July 1996).

The Irish Government formulated the following specific amendment on combating social exclusion:

Social exclusion, Role of the Community

The Community shall contribute to the formulation of policies for combating social exclusion by encouraging cooperation between the Member States and, if necessary, by supporting and complementing their action, while respecting the primacy of the competence of the Member States in this field.

Relations with other Community policies

The Community shall take into account the objective of combating social exclusion in the action it conducts by virtue of other provisions of the Treaty.

Follow-up and consultation

The Commission shall periodically report to the European Parliament, the Council, the Economic and Social Committee and the Committee of the Regions on the progress achieved in combating social exclusion, after consulting, if necessary, the social partners and other competent non-governmental organizations.

Implementation

In order to help achieve the objectives referred to in this article, the Council,

- deciding in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 189c, after consulting the Economic and Social Committee, shall adopt measures, with the exception of measures harmonizing the legislative and regulatory provisions of the Member States;*
- deciding by qualified majority on a proposal from the Commission, shall adopt recommendations.*

Mention was also made of the fight against social exclusion in the preliminary draft revision of the Treaties presented by the Irish Presidency at the Dublin European Council.

7.6 France

In its memorandum of April 1996, 'For a European Social Model', the French Government deals with the question of social exclusion. However, the scope of that political declaration is not certain since it is not intended specifically as a contribution to the IGC.

The memorandum stresses that it is high time that Europe rediscovered Europeans and it points out: 'A more humane Europe is one that combats exclusion. Europe today has 52 million poor people, 3 to 5 million homeless or badly housed, nearly 9 million long-term unemployed. Those cold figures mask enormous distress. In the face of this urgency, European cannot remain passive.' According to the memorandum, this situation calls for two urgent measures: firstly, the adoption of the Poverty IV programme and, secondly, Europe must be given the resources to contribute to social security on the ground. Finally, the memorandum proposes that the opportunity provided by the IGC to incorporate the social protocol in the Treaty must be seized, thus allowing Europe to push harder for the reintegration of those excluded.

7.7 Portugal

A March 1996 document of the ministry of foreign affairs, 'Portugal and the IGC for revision of the Treaty on European Union', was published setting out the Portuguese Government's views on the IGC. The government refers to the deepening of the concept of solidarity, which in its view has a political and economic dimension as well as a social one. It also proposes that a European dimension should be given to job-creation policies and to combating social exclusion. On the economic front, it is in favour of the close coordination of the Member States' policies so as to ensure that all forms of marginalization and social exclusion are combatted in a way that is effective and integrated and has a Community dimension.

7.8 Finland

In a foreign ministry memorandum of 18 September 1995 on the government's options for the 1996 IGC, Finland was in favour of expanding the social dimension. It considered that the EU should conduct a policy based on sustainable economic and social development allowing all forms of exclusion and social divisions to be prevented. Consequently, it stresses the need, in principle, for the Union to take systematic account of social policy aspects in any decisions taken. Finally, it supports full incorporation of the social policy provisions in the Treaty in order to establish a series of minimum levels of social protection at the Community level. However, it considers that the basic decisions on social policy must remain within the scope of national competence.

8    Reflection Group

The Reflection Group chaired by the Spaniard Carlos Westendorp was given the task of producing a report on all current European Union issues that could be raised during the IGC. Its report of 5 December 1995 focussed mainly on establishing an annotated agenda for the Conference and on setting in motion a process of public discussion and explanation regarding the thrust of the changes to be made.

The composition of the report reflects, clearly and succinctly, the summaries of the positions of the Member States.

In the first part of the report ('A Strategy for Europe'), it considers that Europe should become closer to its citizens and meet the challenges which confront it, which include marginalization and social exclusion. Similarly, it reports that the majority of Member States include social exclusion among the problems demanding an urgent response.

The second part of the report - 'An annotated Agenda' - looks at the provisions that could be revised. No provision deals specifically with social exclusion. Two developments are indirectly linked to social exclusion:

(i)    The promotion of European values

The report stresses that a large majority of the Group is in favour of introducing the Agreement on Social Policy into Title VIII. Some members advocate the inclusion of the European Social Charter in the Treaty. Finally, it notes that a large majority of the Member States are in favour of including a general non-discrimination clause (in addition to the one prohibiting discrimination on grounds of nationality in Article 6), with special consideration for disabled persons (both by referring to them in the non-discrimination clause in Article 6 of the TEU and by a provision in one of its chapters), subject to a more detailed assessment of their legal and economic implications by the Conference. However, one member was opposed to that and felt that such rights were best secured in a national context.

(ii)    Employment

The report stresses the urgent need to create jobs in response to a pressing demand from Europe's citizens and that a large majority of States proposed that more stress should be placed on this objective in the tasks of the Union.

9    Observations of NGOs

Numerous NGOs have called for combating social exclusion to be expressly incorporated in the scope of the Union when the Treaty is revised.

Some of the NGOs (Europa Caritas, European Anti-Poverty Network, European Federation of National Organizations Working with the Homeless, International Movement ATD Fourth World), which the European Parliament considered sufficiently representative, were invited to express their concerns at a major public hearing organized by the Committee on Institutional Affairs and held in two parts on 17-18 October 1995 and on 26-27 February 1996. Their contributions have been summarized in a Committee on Institutional Affairs publication entitled: 'The 1996 Intergovernmental Conference: the European Parliament listening to citizens'.

The proposals of the European Anti-Poverty Network (EAPN) have been reiterated on several occasions in the context of the IGC, inter alia in the final declaration adopted at the end of the EAPN seminar on 'Mobilizing Europe against Poverty and Exclusion', held in Dublin on 6 July 1996, and on the occasion of World Day against Poverty on 17 October 1996. The EAPN stresses the importance of the IGC as a decisive turning-point in the history of the European enterprise and calls for the opportunity to be taken to redirect the current economic model towards a more lasting social model which takes account of the human and social costs of economic restructuring and addresses itself to the roots of unemployment, poverty and social exclusion. The EAPN calls, more specifically, for the Treaties to be amended to the following ends: making the fight against poverty and social exclusion a priority objective of the Union; guaranteeing basic social rights for all residents of the Union; putting the 'social dimension' at the centre of all policies; and regarding the NGOs and associations as a new 'social partner'.

10 Conclusion

Adding the principle of combating social exclusion and poverty to the text of the Treaty is one of the European Parliament's priorities in the context of safeguarding social cohesion in the EU and its Member States. At the present stage of progress of the IGC, on the basis of the draft treaty revision proposed by the Irish Presidency and in anticipation of the Amsterdam European Council, we can expect substantive improvements to be made to the Treaty with a view to increasing the effectiveness of the Union's social policy, particularly the provisions relating to social exclusion.
